

Daniel Lambert

@chefdaniellambert · 43,046 followers · 5.1% engagement rate (public data)

You turn intimidated home cooks into people who plate restaurant-grade comfort food in one pan — and they already DM you for the recipe.

CONSERVATIVE ESTIMATE

€32,250

Estimate: one €150 digital product bought by 10% of the 2,152 people who already engage with every post. That is the number this whole document is built on, and every step of the arithmetic is shown on page 3 so you can argue with it.

Inside: what your numbers say · where the €32,250 comes from · the product ladder and the three routes to it · offer detail and the first step to build each one · the six-phase launch · the exact carousel to post this week to test demand before you build anything.

SECTION ONE

What your numbers say

Public profile data, plus the engagement the audit recorded on your three strongest themes. Nothing here is projected — it has already happened.

43,046

FOLLOWERS

5.1%

ENGAGEMENT RATE

689

POSTS PUBLISHED

2,141

AVERAGE LIKES

56

AVERAGE COMMENTS

Verified

CHEF · AUTHOR · PRESENTER

The content that works

Two things separate your top posts from your average ones. First, you hand over the whole method in the caption — full ingredient list, full steps, no gatekeeping. Second, you already run a sales mechanic without calling it one: "Comment 'Recipe' and I'll DM it straight to you." Your audience is trained to put their hand up and receive something from you in a private message. That is the exact channel a product launch runs through, and you built it years ago.

PILLAR 01

Viral DIY recreations

Pistachio paste, sold out everywhere, rebuilt at home. 13,313 likes · 167 comments · 545,000+ views — your strongest performer by a distance. They want to beat retail scarcity and price.

PILLAR 02

One-pan comfort classics

The "Lush Comforts" sausage rigatoni. 3,948 likes · 89 comments · 483,000+ views. The engagement lifts when you strip out hassle: one pan, no unnecessary washing up.

PILLAR 03

Crispy heritage & bar bites

Guinness hash browns from four Maris Pipers. 470,000+ views · 178 comments. Texture cues and a short technique breakdown that makes a cheap ingredient look expensive.

The verdict from the audit: the demand is pent-up rather than hypothetical. Your audience is not asking for inspiration. They are asking for your shortcuts, so their food tastes like a restaurant meal.

SECTION TWO

Where the number comes from

Five lines of arithmetic. Two are public fact, three are stated assumptions. If you disagree with an assumption, change it and the number moves with it.

STEP	WHERE IT COMES FROM	FIGURE
Follower base	Public profile data	43,046
Engaged audience (5%)	Audit premise. Sanity-checked against your own averages: 2,141 likes + 56 comments = 2,197 interactions on a typical post	2,152
Conversion — conservative (10%)	Estimate. Assumes one in ten of the people who engage with every post buys once	215 buyers
Product price	A single dedicated digital product, as specified in the audit	€150
Conservative case	215 buyers × €150 — estimate	€32,250

UPPER CASE — ESTIMATE

€48,450

2,152 engaged × 15% = 323 buyers × €150.
This is the ceiling in the audit, not a forecast. It assumes three in twenty of your engaged audience buy in a single launch window.

FLOOR — ESTIMATE

€16,200

2,152 engaged × 5% = 108 buyers × €150.
Worth knowing, because a first launch to an audience that has never been sold to lands closer to the bottom of a range than the top.

On currency: the audit was written at a $150 price point. Your audience buys in euro, so the same price point is carried across as €150 throughout, and every total here is that €150 figure multiplied out. No conversion rate has been applied and no figure has been inflated.

All buyer counts are rounded down to whole people. Engagement figures per theme are the ones recorded in the audit.

SECTION TWO, CONTINUED

What actually moves it

Three levers, in order of how much control you have over them. This is the page to read before anyone tells you to double the price.

01 The size of the engaged audience (highest leverage)

Everything hangs off 2,152 people. You already own the mechanic that grows that list: "comment 'Recipe' and I'll DM it". Point that mechanic at an email list or a WhatsApp group instead of a one-off DM and the 2,152 becomes a number you can reach at will, rather than one you have to hope the algorithm serves. The pistachio paste reel alone put your work in front of hundreds of thousands of people — none of whom you can currently contact.

02 Conversion (the assumption doing the work)

The gap between the conservative and optimistic case is five percentage points — 215 buyers versus 323, €32,250 versus €48,450. Nothing about your content changes that; the launch sequence does. That is why section six exists and why the DM follow-up in Phase 5 is the part that decides which end of the range you land on.

03 Price (the one to leave alone first time)

At €150 you need 215 buyers for the conservative case. Halve the price and you need 430 to stand still — that is 20% of your engaged audience, which is a far bigger ask than the price cut saves you. Hold €150 for launch one and let the finished product justify it.

One rule for reading page 5: the three products in the ladder are three routes to the same €32,250, not three revenue streams to add together. They would all be sold to the same 2,152 people. Pick one, launch it properly, then build the next.

SECTION THREE

The product ladder

The three paths the audit identifies, priced at the single €150 point it specifies. Each is aimed at one of your three proven pillars.

OFFER	BUILT ON	PRICE	BUYERS (EST.)	REVENUE (EST.)
The Comfort Chef Blueprint The big bet — flagship video system	Pillar 02 — one-pan comfort, flavour layering	€150	215-323	€32,250-€48,450
The Viral Kitchen Vault Masterclass collection	Pillar 01 — sold-out items rebuilt at home	€150	215-323	€32,250-€48,450
The 30-Minute One-Pan Playbook Tactical weeknight course	Pillars 02 & 03 — speed, zero cleanup, texture	€150	215-323	€32,250-€48,450

Buyer counts are 10%-15% of the 2,152-person engaged audience. Identical because the price and the audience are identical — the difference between these three is positioning, not maths.

PICK THIS IF

You want the offer with the widest appeal and the longest shelf life, and you are happy to film a full system once.

BlueprintPICK THIS IF

You want to launch off the back of your single best-performing post and can keep adding a trend recreation every month.

VaultPICK THIS IF

You want the fastest thing to produce and the easiest promise to prove in a 30-second reel.

Playbook

Recommendation: lead with the Blueprint and hold the Vault back as the time-limited launch bonus in Phase 4. You get the broad offer and the proven hook in the same launch, and you have a second product already half-built for next time.

SECTION FOUR

Offer detail: the flagship

OPTION ONE · €150 · THE BIG BET

The Comfort Chef Blueprint

What it is: a complete video system teaching everyday cooks how to build deep restaurant flavour, nail sauces and balance textures using supermarket staples.

Who it is for: food lovers and busy professionals who want to cook incredible meals for friends and family without spending three hours in the kitchen or washing ten pots.

Why it sells: it answers the exact pain point behind your biggest view counts. People crave rich, impressive food; what they lack is a bulletproof system to pull it off.

What is inside

- Flavour layering — the order of operations that makes a sausage rigatoni taste like it was finished in a restaurant pass, not a home hob.
- Sauces without fear — the handful of sauces that carry most comfort dishes, each one built in the same pan as the main event.
- Texture — the crisp-versus-soft contrast that made the Guinness hash browns land: soak, dry, starch, fry.
- One-pan discipline — how to design a dinner so nothing else ends up in the sink.
- The shop — which supermarket staples to always have in, so a good dinner is never a special trip.

The promise

Pick any night of the week, open the press, and put something on the table that people ask you about — with one pan and no chef school.

First step to build it: do not film a curriculum. Film one module — flavour layering, using the sausage rigatoni you have already proven — as five short lessons on your phone in your own kitchen. Sell that module as the Blueprint's opening chapter during launch week and film the rest while people are already inside. The audience that comments "Recipe" is telling you they will happily learn from you in short, self-contained pieces.

SECTION FOUR, CONTINUED

Offer detail: the alternatives

OPTION TWO · €150

The Viral Kitchen Vault

What it is: a collection of masterclasses that break down trending, sold-out specialty items — pistachio paste, hot dips, artisan street food — into foolproof home versions.

The difference: it is not general cooking. It is trend recreation and luxury items you cannot easily buy, which is precisely what your 13,313-like reel proved people will stop scrolling for.

Inside: one full breakdown per item (ingredients, ratios, storage, what to do with it after), a "why the shop version costs what it costs" cost comparison, and a new recreation added each month while the trend is live.

The promise: when the internet decides something is sold out everywhere, you already have it on the counter.

First step to build it: rebuild the pistachio paste video as a proper lesson — weights, ratios, the white chocolate and coconut oil logic, the mistakes — and use it as the free sample that sells the Vault.

OPTION THREE · €150

The 30-Minute One-Pan Playbook

What it is: a tactical course built only around fast, high-impact dinners — maximum flavour, minimal equipment, zero cleanup.

The difference: hyper-practical and time-boxed, for the viewers who love the "Lush Comforts" style but need it on a Tuesday at half six.

Inside: a bank of one-pan dinners at 30 minutes or under, the three sauce bases they all rotate through, a crispy-element cheat that works in a pan or an air fryer, and a week's shop that feeds all of them.

The promise: a proper dinner in half an hour, one pan in the sink.

First step to build it: post one reel that times you start to plate, on camera, with the washing up shown at the end. If that single reel outperforms your average, this is the offer to lead with instead of the Blueprint.

SECTION FIVE

Launch plan: phases 1–3

The structure from the audit, with what to post at each stage. Phases one to three happen before a price is ever mentioned.

01 Build up — interaction is the only goal

Stories all week, aimed at the pain point rather than the product. A poll: "Do you buy the jarred sauce because homemade feels like too much hassle?" A question box: "What one dish do you want to nail this year?" Re-share the pistachio paste reel with a sticker asking whether they would want every sold-out item broken down like that. Read the answers back on camera — the words people use here become the sales copy later.

02 Invitation — move them somewhere you own

Announce that something is coming and invite them into a private group. Use the mechanic they already know: instead of "comment 'Recipe'", it is "comment 'LUSH' and I'll send you the link". Same habit, new destination. Tease that there is a time-limited bonus inside for the people in the group first, and say plainly that the detail only gets revealed in there.

03 Anticipation — teach once, for free, inside the group

Give the group one real lesson: the flavour-layering order on the sausage rigatoni, filmed properly, start to plate. Then make the timeline unmissable — the day doors open, the day they close, and what happens in between. Nobody in that group should be surprised on launch day.

Why this order matters: phases one to three exist to turn 2,152 scattered engagers into a group you can message directly. The conversion assumption on page 3 only holds if you can reach those people without the algorithm's permission.

SECTION FIVE, CONTINUED

Launch plan: phases 4–6

The selling window. Short, dated, and closed for real at the end of it.

04 Reveal — leave no ambiguity

The full breakdown, in the group first: what is included, the price (€150), the exclusive bonus — the Viral Kitchen Vault pistachio paste masterclass — and the exact open and close dates. Say what it is not, as well as what it is. People do not buy when they are unsure what they are getting.

05 Conversion — the DMs are the shop floor

Send the enrolment link. Run a poll with two options: "I'm in" and "I have a question". Then answer every single question personally, one to one. This is the phase that decides whether you land at 215 buyers or 323 — the difference between the two scenarios on page 3 is made here, not in the content.

06 Urgency — and a close that is real

Countdown messages at 24, 12, 6 and 2 hours, then a clear "closed". Each one names what they are choosing to keep: another year of the jarred sauce and the ten pots. Then honour the close. Reopening after a deadline costs you the next launch, and there will be a next launch.

KEEP IT TIGHT

A three to five day window with a hard close. A long, open-ended launch trains people to wait, and waiting is how a 10% conversion becomes a 3% one.

KEEP FILMING

Do not stop posting recipes during launch week. The reels are what bring new people into the group mid-launch, and they are the proof that the method works.

SECTION SIX

The first post

Post this before you build anything. Plain black background, white text, three slides, in your own voice. It costs you an evening and it tells you whether the €150 offer has buyers behind it.

SLIDE 1 — HOOK

You order in because you reckon home cooking never tastes as rich.

SLIDE 2 — AGITATE

It is not the fancy ingredients.
It is not chef school.
Nobody ever showed you how restaurants layer flavour and balance texture — in one pan.

SLIDE 3 — CALL TO ACTION

What if you had the exact framework to turn a basic shop into restaurant-level comfort food on a Tuesday?

Comment I WANT and I will tell you more.

The caption

Right. Straight question for you.

You lot comment "Recipe" on everything I put up — and I love that — but recipes are not the thing that is stopping you. The thing stopping you is nobody showed you how to layer flavour and get the textures right in one pan, without the sink full of pots afterwards.

I am putting together the full framework I actually use. Comment I WANT and I will send you the first bit free. 🍪

Then, on stories the same day

A 15-second piece to camera over something bubbling: "Poll for you. Would you rather I kept posting one-off recipes, or gave you the full system so you can cook like this without me?" Two options. Screenshot the result.

How to read the response: 40 or more "I WANT" replies is roughly 2% of your engaged audience raising a hand before anything exists — build the Blueprint. Under 15, and the offer is not wrong but the angle is: re-run the same test with the Viral Kitchen Vault hook, because pistachio paste is the post your audience voted for hardest.

CLOSING

What to do next

THIS WEEK

Post the three-slide carousel on page 10 and run the story poll the same day. Count the replies. That is your whole to-do list until the numbers come in.

NEXT WEEK

If the replies clear 40, film one module of the Comfort Chef Blueprint – flavour layering on the sausage rigatoni – and start the group with "comment LUSH".

CONSERVATIVE CASE · ESTIMATE

€32,250

215 buyers from your 2,152-strong engaged audience, at €150 once. The ceiling in the audit is €48,450; plan for the first figure and treat the second as upside.

Reply to this DM and I will walk you through the numbers and what to build first.

Prepared by Euan Grant · Autora AI Automation · September 2026

All revenue figures are estimates based on public profile data and the audit above. Follower count, engagement rate, average likes and average comments are public data. Engaged audience, conversion rates and totals are assumptions, stated on page 3 so you can change them.

How this was made: I build automations for a living and used AI to do the analysis on your content and numbers – which is why this took an evening rather than a fortnight.

DL